Thoughts on Traveling Sober

The "travel" season is upon us and some may be anxious about maintaining their sobriety away from home. After reviewing several articles containing tips for traveling sober I would like to offer the following observations.

Plan your trip. There are many destinations that feature more than nightlife or drinking establishments. There are even guides or agencies that specialize in sober destinations and/or modes of travel. Be honest with yourself and your recovery. If you are new to recovery, or struggling, perhaps now is not the time to be away from your sober network. Maybe that bachelor or bachelorette party in Vegas is not the best thing right now.

Relax. Schedules may not work out as planned, destinations may not be as expected, people may have their own stresses. Don't sweat the small stuff and remember, it's ALL small stuff.

Treat yourself well. Travel brings many physical stresses that can easily become mental or emotional triggers. Drink plenty of water. Eat sensibly and regularly. Get plenty of sleep. These simple parts of life can be more difficult when traveling so make a conscious effort to maintain them.

Stay connected. Contact those who have helped you stay sober and let them know how you are feeling and what you are experiencing. If you are a person who normally attends sober meetings, seek them out during your travels. "Friends of Bill" meetings can be found the world over.

Enjoy. You are not traveling to think about what you may be missing. Enjoy what you have planned as well as unexpected joys that may arise. Be positive.

Q: What did the sponsor say to the sponsee after he told his story to the group for the first time?

- Editor

A: "Your "I"s are too close together."

I was so sick when I was new, at one point I asked another guy in my home group if I could copy his Fourth Step.
